We live in a violent society—and violence comes in many forms. We are shocked by increasing conflict in our streets, our schools, our homes. Violence knows no class, racial, economic or geographical boundaries. People in the US twice as likely to be murdered as in many other Western countries. Schools resort to metal detectors. Widespread domestic violence, physical and mental, injures both spouses and children. We lead the world in prison population, and our prisons, rather than protecting society from violence spawn more violence.
